ABSTRACT

This document is a collection of articles on foreign language education from both state and national sources. The articles deal with trends in the field, resources for the foreign language teacher, creative student work and audiovisual teaching aids. The volume is divided into the following sections: (1) general language (including the articles "The Foreign Language Teacher as a Multi Cultural Educator - Promises, Pitfalls and Preparation," by Frederick Jenks and "An Outline of Methods and Materials for Presenting Culture in the Classroom," by Marianne Harvey); (2) Spanish (lists of materials for classroom use, including games, books, films, posters, records, slides, travel guides and maps, comics, paperbacks, etc.); (3) French (including an article by Kay Planagan, "Toward Free Conversation in the Classroom"); (4) German (including a long list of classroom projects); (5) Russian; (6) Latin; (7) Miscellaneous; (8) Italian; (9) Oriental (including a list of publications concerning Vietnamese refugees in the United States); (10) Summer Workshops; and (11) Contributors' List. (PROMISES, PITFALLS, AND PREPARATION) by Frederick L. Jenks, Florida State University

The rapidity of changes around us - political, social, philosophical and economic in nature - has altered our lives drastically in the past fifteen years. Perhaps nowhere is this more obvious than in our educational institutions. The barrage of criticism currently directed toward education is a visible and audible indication of wide dissatisfaction with the curriculum and content. For years, foreign language educators represented one of the weak flanks in the curriculum and, in my opinion, were attacked unduly. However, having been forced to seek responses and counter-proposals to the pervasive negativism of the public that we serve, our own self-examination has brought us to a watershed - a point where we can renew others' confidence in our mission, capabilities, and earnestness. It is now the turn of teachers of reading and other basic skills to react in a sincere manner to the contemporary "Three R's Crisis." Indeed, all educators must come to grips with a three-pronged threat and convert it to our guiding companion. The components are (1) teaching the content of our selected field so that students learn the requisite skills, (2) developing in students a knowledge, awareness, and understanding of social realities, and (3) accomplish the first two while stimulating the interests of students to learn today and build upon that learning tomorrow. I am convinced that we second language educators are among the chosen few who can respond swiftly and validly by becoming, as Lambert states, "people educators." It is to this proposition that the following words will apply.

What is a foreign language educator? It is a person who knows more than one language who has reached out intellectually to communicate with another group of humans who has read and dissected a second body of literature, who believes that knowing one language is as sterile as knowing one melody. It is a person who strives to accept others as world-peers, (who hopes to be accepted as an equal in return), who has taken the tough initiative to adopt or accept new ways and new ideas by setting aside the blinders of ethnocentrism and isolationism. It is a courageous person who has taken up the challenge - one that is rarely met - to become bilingual, bicultural and, thereby become the possessor of dual (rather than split) personalities. In this last regard, all but those who have lived or been raised in a bilingual bicultural atmosphere are acutely aware that they will spend their professional lives in a state of becoming rather than one of being. It takes an especially flexible yet committed individual to accept this challenge, to pursue a career in which total achievement is so elusive and perfect accomplishments by students are almost unheard of.

The second language educator then, shares with America's minority group populations: both are under-employed, viewed with suspicion, considered to be dispensable, under-rated, and unappreciated. The major difference is that we chose our position whereas our racial and ethnic minorities were forced to maintain such positions. The nature of the contemporary educational structure, however, is forcing many language teachers to be viewed by fellow teachers as last vestiges of outdated curricula. Thus, we must again make a choice: do we continue to speak for the rejuvenation of that which we have been doing for so many years or do we seek new professional roles and pedagogical thrusts?

Given this cursive profile of second language educators, with attention to their traits and predicament, it seems logical to me that our route to career fulfillment and valued teaching is parallel to our cerebral interests. That is, LEARNING A LANGUAGE equals LEARNING A PEOPLE, TEACHING A LANGUAGE equals TEACHING A LIFEWAY. Conversely, TEACHING A LIFEWAY equals TEACHING A LANGUAGE. The issue is not merely how do we do this. Neither is it when do we do this. The need is for us to begin doing it regardless of how, where, when or wherefore.

Less than five years ago, I spoke to a group of teachers in San Francisco, stating that we were at the brink of events that would bring foreign study to hundreds of thousands of students yearly. 747's, group air fares, and well-coordinated planning would produce swift immersion in target cultures; inflation and petroleum pressure dashed that possibility in late 1973 when $199 round-trip air fares from New York to Europe were only months away from being announced by major passenger lines. At almost the same time, Bilingual/Bicultural education and ethnic heritage education finally received the long-awaited support of Federal funding agencies. Additionally several key publications, most notably Saturday Review and Phi Delta Kappan, Novak's book The Unmeltable Ethnics and other timely works exposed many truths about the diversity that exists within our macro-culture - truths about ourselves!

This mixture of circumstances pointed the way for language teachers to look inward in order to practice their profession. These events provide second language educators with the societal support necessary to activate a curriculum that consists of languages, ethnic studies in America, and cultural studies of a global nature. In so doing we are also correlating our efforts to form a new pedagogical role for ourselves with the Bicentennial themes of "unity through diversity" and "one nation, many voices." Thus, the time is very ripe for us to focus in on stateside language and living as a major component of the studies offered under the rubric of "foreign language teaching." We could spearhead that curriculum. Moreover, we SHOULD spearhead it!

Since we are already involved in the teaching of languages and are aware of the stuff that this task is made of, let us move our thoughts to our macro-cultural concerns - foreign cultures. Most teachers realize, if they dig deep inside themselves, that their initial excitement in learning a second language was spawned by a desire to learn about "different" people. The fascination broadened as each of us became more exposed to routes by which others dealt with life's mazes. The mystery derived from learning that their chosen solutions - alien to our system of logic (and therefore open to suspicion at first) - worked well for them in spite of its seemingly faulty derivation. In other words everybody makes it through life somehow and, to quote any adolescent, "That's what it's all about, man."

Culture isn't a Friday class function any more than it is Friday function for the people who live within the culture. Without daily implications in life as well as in the classroom, the words that are spoken or the words printed in the textbook merely lay there in state. It takes knowledge of the ways of people from other backgrounds to blow down the walls of insulation that surround each of us - walls on which many have unknowingly written, "my kind is the best kind." Only by the prudent application of techniques by us and other social science educators can we bring the reality of human interdependence before young students. Knowledge of the foreign language plus open eyes and ears during cross-cultural contacts (or simulated contacts) are, simply stated, indispensable characteristics of the person who deals with life beyond his or her own neighborhood.

As Elizabeth O. Pearson suggests, students must prove their own cultural attitude at the beginning of language study by responding to questions like:

- a. How do you react when you hear someone speaking a foreign language?
- b. How do you feel when a new student from a different cultural background is assigned a seat next to you in class?
- c. Are you aware of the presence of persons with a racial background different than yours? What do you think about when you recognize this awareness?
- d. How do you feel when you are visiting someone with customs or traditions different from you?

These responses should be filed in a place where others will have no access to them. They may be taken out months later so that students may note any change of feelings. If they haven't changed, we teachers had best get busy deciphering the problems and discussing them with other teachers. (Make that concerned teachers since, regrettably, our profession is not without its own ethnocentric, mono-cultural cretins.) It is definitely our task to provide instruction that will assist students in developing realistic feelings about "different" people so that, if they are to be turned off linguistically, it will be when they hear or read such expressions as "waste the village" or "nega-deaths" rather than a simple "Buenas noches" or "Comment vas-tu?"

As for ethnic studies in America, this may be the key to social tranquility plus tactile, germane, second language experiences for our students. Given the fact that there are as many as 15,000,000 Spanish-speaking residents in this country, plus many millions whose first language is neither English or Spanish, it boggles the academic mind to realize that we haven't reached out to communicate with ourselves. Perhaps it will take inflation and petroleum shortages to force us to focus in on the riches in our own communities. How have we been able to sincerely promote the study of second languages while hiding our ancestors, neighbors, and ourselves? Language teachers must share the blame for failing to accelerate the recognition of the healthy and active minority segments whose daily language is our classroom language. Let's be swift to proclaim that we are either as Strasheim says, authentic ethnics by birth or origin, professional ethnics by our allegiance to the teaching of another language and culture, or empathic ethnics due to our eagerness to relate to the woes and smiles of our neighbors. A language teacher is a Multi-ethnic! A language student is but a person en route to multiethnicity.

How does one prepare for the role of multi-cultural ethnic educator? Assuming that our professional education officially begins in college and extends throughout our career, I propose the following:

- a. EVERY foreign language department provide not one but multiple courses for all majors, the courses focussing on stateside language usage, or neighboring dialects "Oral language usage of Mexican Americans, Puerto Ricans, Cuban-Americans, Franco-Americans, Pennsylvania Dutch, etc." How about "Haitian or Caribbean French," "African French," or "Quebecois French?" To a language teacher, a professional in need of day-to-day survival skills, the ability to interpret and speak Mexican-American Spanish far transcends the need for a course in the drama of any century.
- b. Student teaching in the foreign language certification sequence isn't an experience that should be confined to the public school classroom. At Florida State, we have had great success by permitting seniors to intern at a bilingual school in Medellin, Columbia. We send mostly elementary education majors there to do student teaching. However, every quarter that we sent a foreign language student, she was rated as the best teacher of the entire group. No elementary education methods courses on their transcripts, but solid foreign language skills and educational methodology work were more than sufficient to promote successful teaching. This positive experience is destined to be matched as we strive to place E.S.L. and foreign language interns into elementary schools for migrant children in Florida.
- c. At the undergraduate level, foreign language departments, in cooperation with social science, social studies education, and foundational studies (educational philosophy, psychology, etc.) departments, should construct more fitting courses with cross-cultural skills, communication exercises and strategies, and ethnic history as replacements for the oft-criticized general foundation courses or required history classes.
- d. Last year when Dr. Karl Openshaw accepted the position of Dean of the School of Education of the University of Colorado, he proclaimed his belief that EVERY future teacher should undergo a cultural immersion residency as a prerequisite to graduation. This is but one instance of events that should receive the attention and strong backing of all foreign language teachers on the local scene. I suggest that the fall meeting of the various AAT's and COLORADO CONGRESS place on their agendas the development of a professional position paper that demonstrates the united stance of ALL foreign language teachers on topics as specific as this Dean's statement or as general as Colorado's newly enacted Bilingual/Bicultural Education legislation. WE want to see our profession grow and spread! WE must push!
- e. Foreign students and American students (especially those majoring in a foreign language) should be offered more opportunities to interact.
- f. Language majors and language teachers should promote the development of fairs and or retreats in which ethnic groups display, debate and demonstrate their customs, beliefs, languages and aspirations.

One of our terminal goals, then whether they be in Japanese, Italian, Cherokee, or one of the frequently-taught languages might be that "students demonstrate through words and behavior that they are proud of their past, present, and hopefully their future as a people." Endurance, tolerance, and realistic pride. . all are admirable traits that we can help our students develop as they learn about themselves, their ancestors and a new language.

Remarks from speech delivered to public at the University of Colorado, July 1975

VALUE OF LANGUAGE STUDY

"There are good reasons for studying a foreign language, besides that of gaining access to the ideas and experience of another civilization. These reasons are more subtle and tend not to carry much weight with persons who have merely played around with a foreign language rather than mastering it. The study of another language gives one a deeper insight into the nature of language and of thought itself. A person who grapples with the mysteries of non-correspondence between two different languages is actually coming to grips with basic problems in logic, semantics, analytic philosophy, rhetoric. It doesn't matter a great deal whether he is familiar with and can define those subjects; he is into them - struggling with them - whether he realizes it or not. The net result, provided he goes into the other language deeply enough, is that the experience changes his perceptions - perceptions of his own language and of other things. The old idea that the study of Latin and Greek helps one to know English better is true enough, but most people think that is merely because many English words are derived from or borrowed from those languages. Unless they have personally experienced the process of translating from a foreign language on a fairly sophisticated level, the more subtle benefits of such work are not apparent to them. The basic point here applies to all subjects: familiarity with a subject is not necessarily knowledge of it, and knowledge of it is not necessarily understanding of it; the difference might be called degree of insight.

TRANSMISSION AND COMPREHENSION

Taken from an editorial by Norman Cousins in World 10/24/72

"What people and their governments say to each other is inseparable from what they do with and to one another, yet what they say may be poorly said and even more poorly comprehended. This makes for a certain untidiness in human affairs and even for confrontation or collapse.

Communications technology is clearly equal to the needs of world community, but the same cannot yet be said of communications philosophy or even communications systems. The world conducts its complex and volatile affairs with verbal resources far behind its transmission capability. People and nations establish contact far more readily than rapport. The conveyance of human bodies from one part of the world to the other can be accomplished more efficiently and satisfactorily than the conveyance of meaning. An important aspect of the problem, indeed, is that words often arrive long before the ideas they represent.

The multiplicity of languages and the problem of imprecision in transmission transcend the conduct of world politics even though they clearly have a world political effect. This intercourse is most tangibly evident not so much in the circulation of books - even though it would be gratifying to believe the contrary in International Book Year - as it is in the direct exchange of words by people from different countries and cultures. The international convention has become conventional. Today literally millions of people are involved in close range verbal traffic. Almost every day, in different parts of the world, non-governmental people are coming together in international meetings - academicians, scientists, business executives, computer specialists, sanitary engineers, bridge builders, environmentalists, highway engineers, containerization technicians, aviation representatives, architects, psychiatrists, heart surgeons, internists, lawyers, kitefliers, systems analysts, book publishers, hotel managers, futurists, veterinarians, devotees of W.B. Yeats, and people in a thousand other fields.

What all these diverse groups have in common is the problem of making themselves clear. They convene with ease but converse with effort. All men have new physical access to one another, but many of the attitudinal distances remain.

AN OUTLINE OF METHODS AND MATERIALS FOR PRESENTING CULTURE IN THE CLASSROOM

Marianne Harvey
Everett Public Schools

First Year

- A. Dictionary: 1) Students keep track of new vocabulary; 2) Each letter a title page of one work and a picture thereof; 3) Following page is list of new words beginning with that letter.
- B. Family Notebook: 1) Begun at beginning of and kept all year; 2) Student takes on and develops identity of a native family; 3) Additions made as correspond to curriculum; 4) Possible content: ~~Names~~; names and ages of family; address and phone number; food, restaurant menu, pictures of meals for a day labeled; paragraphs on leisure activities, sports, daily routine; house diagram with room and furniture labeled; wardrobe.
- C. Songs: 1) Sing more difficult ones as vocabulary increases; 2) Rounds good for involvement.
- D. Slides: 1) Supplement to the following: food, houses, sports; 2) Vocabulary introduction or basis for a quiz.
- E. Food Sampling: 1) Learn names of meals and place setting - then a day for cooking; 2) Eat European fashion; 3) German typical and easy to prepare: sausage and bread, hot potato salad; 4) Restaurant skit.
- F. Christmas Activities: 1) Students make Christmas symbols (German marzipan figure 2) Decorate a tree with native-like ornaments; 3) Sing carols, 5-10 minutes a day 4) Party with carols, skits and treats made by students; 5) Observe related days (Nikolaus, Three Kings Day).

LEARN A LANGUAGE

Iowa F.L. Bulletin, Feb. 1975

NO, VIRGINIA, THE REST OF THE WORLD DOES'T SPEAK ENGLISH

Once upon a time - and not so long ago, either - taking a foreign language was something only the college-bound kids did. But it's just not that way anymore. Sure, the college-bound crowd is still taking foreign languages while in high school, but so are lots of others. And here's why, in one four-letter word: JOBS.

That's right, jobs. Jobs in every conceivable field. They're harder and harder to get these days, regardless of whether you go to college or not. And employers, who now have a much wider choice among applicants than they once did, are realizing that an employee who knows a foreign language is a realizing that an employee who knows a foreign language is a real plus for their businesses.

And talk about immediate employability for high school students and recent graduates! As we approach the American bicentennial in 1976, the number of jobs in the travel industry as a whole is expected to double; yet, of the 65,000 hotels and motel in the United States, only one in fifty is listed by the US Travel Service as having adequately bilingual or multilingual staffs to meet the needs of the crowds of foreign tourists who are expected to be coming to America.

Here's what the executive of New York's Statler-Hilton told the New York Times recently:

I think one of the major criteria in hiring people for the hotel is their knowledge of languages. We now have employees here who speak 36 languages and that isn't an accident. The reception desk has a list of staff, what languages they speak and when and where they work. If we need their help we can get them in seconds.

Indeed, a knowledge of a foreign language can be useful for any job. One language school in the West, for instance, has enrolled doctors, businessmen, lawyers, airline pilots, actors, policemen, nurses, teachers, stewardesses, social workers, and real estate agents!

As you probably see from these few examples, foreign languages are important in America today as they've never been before. Knowledge of a foreign language can be that little extra "plus" that will land you the job you want.

Think about it . . . then see your counselor.

This information has been taken from a 31 page booklet, "Foreign Languages and Career" by Lucille J. Honig and Richard I. Brod, published by MLA. It should be very useful to both teachers and guidance counselors since it is very specific in its information. Under two main headings - "Language as an auxiliary skill" and "Language as a primary skill" - it gives details as to requirements and opportunities in many fields. For information, write to: Modern Language Association, 62 Fifth Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10011. The booklet costs 75¢ from MLA for single copies with reduced rates for bulk orders.

THIS DEPARTMENT WANTS LINGUISTS

Employees of the CA Dept. of Motor Vehicles (DMV) soon will be able to ask "Can I help you?" in Arabic, Armenian, Chinese, Korean, Filipino, Japanese, Portuguese and Spanish.

In the first move by any state dept. to put into effect a new law that there be bilingual persons in public contact positions where needed, the DMV did a study and plans to earmark 100 jobs for people with the necessary language proficiency.

But don't run to your nearest DMV and apply for a job. The posts will become available when normal vacancies arise in the particular offices of the DMV that the study showed needed workers with ability to speak a certain language.

According to DMV Director Herman Sillas, no present employees will be transferred to meet a language need. The emphasis will be on future hiring and the language needs of each office will be reviewed each year.

In answer to the crying needs of school boards seeking materials for minority studies, a career oriented instruction tool, presenting English as a Second Language/Dialect has been prepared for immediate use. The instruction tool includes valuable input from leaders in the E. S. L. and bilingual education fields across the nation, and is now ready in usable looseleaf form. The instruction tool includes a student booklet, examinations, a teaching guide, wall charts, and an audio cassette, all centered around CAREERS FOR BILINGUALS.

Government Jobs Requiring FL Competency Go Baggins:

A report from the General Accounting Office of the United States government reported that in 1972, 43 per cent of the State's Department's "language-essential" posts were not satisfactorily filled. In 1963 the percentage was 38%.

An article in the Wall Street Journal comments that U.S. government operatives abroad, "have never been renowned for their foreign language proficiency, but one would have expected improvement in recent years as Americans generally have become more cosmopolitan and, theoretically at least, better educated." Some of the problem, says the Journal, may have come about because of the raiding of State Dept. personnel by multi-national corporations who usually pay better salaries than the government for bilingual specialists in various fields. But the GAO study suggests that an important reason for the problem is the lack of motivation on the part of government employees to "stick with the hard work of learning a language even when the government is footing the bill."

Many Americans in important posts abroad suffer from "foot-in-the-mouth disease." Perhaps more government insistence on language learning on the part of U.S. overseas representatives could help to improve our national image.

ECHO - Fall 1975

In a single issue of the Los Angeles Times recently, there were openings for a driving instructor, dental assistant, camera salesman, personnel manager, painter, carpenter, secretary, optician, carpet salesman, electronics teacher, factory foreman and an auto mechanic - all required to know a second language!

"We need more executives with foreign competence. They're hard to find." (Book Pub.)

"As business becomes more multilingual in character the demand for international banking services will increase, thereby creating needs for more personnel with foreign language skills." (Bank Executive.)

"We prefer someone with strong business experience who has language skill in addition" (Manufacturer)

"A candidate for a professional position is not considered unless he has a foreign language." (Library director)

"One of the social workers here speaks fluent Spanish and she does a lot of work. The patients know that, so they come here." (Hospital nurse)

TRANSLATIONS

The Midwest has always had an abundance of language talent - Des Translation Service, Inc. has made these abilities readily available through a central source. In addition to translations in Spanish, German and French which are available through its organizers, they have expanded to Arabic, Czech, Flemish, Polish, Japanese, Italian, Turkish, Hindi and a variety of other languages by locating and arranging with other persons in the area with the necessary capability.

The prices vary according to the difficulty of the work, but generally they range from $6.00 to $10.00 per page for translation, and $10.00 per hour for interpreting. It has been found to be a good idea to actually see the work involved before stating a final price. If you personally are contacted to do translations or to interpret outside the classroom or not in connection with your contractual obligation, by all means charge an appropriate amount for your services.

Des Translation Service has done translation and interpretation service for individuals as well as businesses and invites inquiry. Please contact:

Wilson and Wattenmaker's Real Communication in a Foreign Language is an attempt to always use personal experience in presenting grammar concepts. With commands, for example, they ask student such questions as: "What are your mother's most frequent commands?" "What are your father's most frequent commands?" For past tenses, the authors ask each student to prepare a "Success Chart" about their past life and accomplishments.

MONOTONY BREAKERS (listed in the Language Association Bulletin of N.Y.; May 1975)

The following activities may be used in foreign language classes with less-able students - suggested by Scott Manuel, Carol Lanahan, Gloria Manuel, Barbara Pierce, Sigrid Essig and Betsy Cushing from Jamesville; DeWitt Middle School.

PLAYER - COACH GAME: Pair up students, one will play the role of a coach, the other of a player. Have a definite topic to be coached such as "er" verbs; numbers 1 - 21; parts of the body, etc. Coaches get the information and answer sheets related to the material to be learned, while the players get question or exercise sheets. Give the students 10-15 minutes to explain and learn. Then the teacher begins a game among the players only. One question is given to each player and this continues until only one player is left. Students get very excited - especially the coaches.

ANSWERING QUESTIONS: To learn question words, use a filmstrip or a dialogue. Divide the students into two groups. Each student selects whether he wants to answer a question starting with Who, What, Where, When and he tells how many points he wants to bet (maximum betting is 10 points). If he gets it right, the points are added, if wrong, they are subtracted from his team's score. A predetermined number of questions is used. The team with the highest score wins.

BINGO CHARTS: Game sheets are used like bingo charts filled in by students. This game may be used with numbers, verbs, alphabet, etc. Winners could receive prizes such as candy.

SENTENCE BUILDING: The teacher places one noun or verb on the board. The class is divided into two teams and each team adds a word or phrase until the sentence is complete or no word can be added. The team adding the last word wins.

The Foreign Language Association of Missouri presents the following teacher-prepared games at $2.50 each; checks payable to Dr. Reva Abelson; 7730 Cornell, St. Louis, Missouri 63130.

CULTURAL AWARENESS FOR THE BILINGUAL TEACHER

by Joyce Freundlich, Bilingual Coordinator, IRES Institute

A mother mouse and her baby were walking down a street when the mother mouse spied a cat lurking behind a corner. "Bow Wow", she said, and the cat scurried away. The mother mouse turned to her child and remarked, "See, it pays to be bilingual!"

The need for bilingual education has arisen from a growing concern on the part of society for the difficulties experienced by non-English and partial bilingual speakers attempting to function effectively within the educational, social and economic environments of a dominant middle-class English-speaking community.

SPECTRUM Winter 1976

The National Association for Bilingual Education defined bilingual Education as, "The use and preservation of two languages and their corresponding cultures." The Spanish-speaking child is often faced with a cultural dilemma as he stands between two worlds, with no definite sense of belonging to either society. When he comes to school, he suffers further disappointment. Added to the plain difficulty of learning to use English full-time is the fact that the materials of instruction are all too often based only on the experience of the American culture. Is it any wonder that he falls behind normal achievement at an ever-increasing rate, with an increasing sense of inferiority?

In order to be effective, bilingual teachers must be cognizant of the culture of their students. Cultural differences are not always readily apparent and, even when they are, they are apt to be misinterpreted by the viewer in terms of his own culture, rather than in terms of the child's culture. The bilingual teacher must be aware that non-English speaking children will not only speak another language, but that they will bring to class an entirely different set of behavior, emotions and thought patterns.

For example, a Spanish child will tend to be more vulnerable to emotional crisis than the average native-born youngster. The Spanish boy, particularly, may require attention in school to allow for the preferential treatment he receives at home. Spanish children may indicate their respect for adult authority by casting their eyes downward in the presence of their teacher, while the American teacher admonishes them to "look her in the eye while she is talking." In addition, the Spanish child may be expected to play the role of a "good Spanish pupil" along the lines taught by his mother. . . to be quiet, to watch and to listen carefully, to do what the teacher tells him to do without question. On this basis, it is easy to predict to what extent the child would be in conflict with the self-initiating, action-oriented behavior expected by many American teachers of their students.

The Spanish child's attitude toward time contrasts sharply with the expectations of the American teacher. Time is not divided into periods and children have difficulty understanding the segmentation of class time, or in following scheduled activities. The Hispanic interpretation of time is a relaxed one. They resent being rushed. The American teacher, on the other hand, prides herself on promptness. Thereupon he or she will be less tolerant of the Hispanic pupils' disregard toward class schedules.

BILINGUAL TELEPHONE SERVICE

State Senator Alex P. Garcia (Democrat-Los Angeles) authored Senate Concurrent Resolution 36 last year requesting statewide hearings on the need for bilingual telephone service in California. Senator Garcia is trying to resolve what has been a serious problem to many of our Spanish-speaking residents, that is, not being able to pick up the telephone to obtain information because they are unable to speak and understand English.

PRACTICALITY Vera Villegas de Galante, Hicksville Public Schools

Each year in education, there is a keyword. Remember - Team Teaching, Modular Schedules, Total Immersion, LAP, accountability?

I propose that we, foreign language teachers, adopt a word - "Practicality"! The age-old rationale for studying a foreign language is passeé. Let us rid ourselves of the harness and blinders of the horse and buggy days and re-tool ourselves. Our slogan should be: "We do not teach for the regents, nor the colleges - we teach for life."

Sounds great but... how do we do it? Change the curriculum! Offer courses that have practical application.

At Hicksville, we offer Spanish for Business Opportunities in lieu of level 3 Spanish. It is a best seller. The course consists of the following units: Business Office: receptionist, secretary, banking; Social Services: police, fire dept., social worker, hospital; Media: radio, T.V., newspaper; and Communication: travel, telephone, sales.

Some of the outgrowths of this course are: the printing of a Spanish newspaper complete with advertisements, editorials, sports, comics, puzzles and Paquita dice; volunteer work at hospitals, IRS, unemployment offices; guest speakers in the field of business and trips to various business concerns.

Of far greater value is the attitude of the students and their feeling for Spanish. They love it. Why? Because it is meaningful and has practical and immediate application.

SPANISH SURNAMED POPULATIONS

The distinguished Hispanic bibliographer Dr. Richard V. Teschner (U. of Iowa) has recently prepared a list of doctoral dissertations pertaining to all Hispanic or Spanish-surnamed populations of the U.S. and its possessions. In particular, the listings deal with Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, and Cubans residing in the U.S.; also included are items pertaining to the Isleños of Louisiana, Sephardic Jewish groups, New York City Galicians, California Central Americans, and others.

The 1,197 items encompass the several disciplines of the social sciences (including library science and the extensive field of education) and of the humanities as well as those disciplines of the sciences which bear directly upon human concerns. A free copy of Spanish-Surnamed Populations of the United States is available upon request from Literature Services, Xerox University Microfilms, 300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor Michigan 48106.

ACCENT on ACTFL

TODAY'S EDUCATION, Jan-Feb 1976 cites figures by the U.S. Census Bureau which show that about 11.2 million Americans or about 5% of the total population are of Spanish origin. "Most of the Spanish-origin population, about 6.7 million or 60% of the total, are of Mexican origin. Persons of Puerto Rican origin comprise about 15%; persons of Cuban origin, 7%; those of Central or South American origin, 6%; and the remainder who are of other Spanish origin, nearly 13%."

The survey disclosed that in 1974, the median income for families headed by a person of Spanish origin was $9,560; in the same year the median for all U.S. families was $12,840.

With regard to education, younger persons of Spanish origin have completed more school years than their elders. The report shows that about 52% of persons in the 25-29 year bracket have completed at least 4 years of high school; only about 24% of those in the 55 to 64 age bracket have done so.

FLAND NEWS March 1976

CALIFORNIA HAS THE MOST PEOPLE OF SPANISH ORIGIN (Washington AP)

California has the largest number of residents of Spanish origin but Texas has a higher concentration, according to a new Census Bureau report.

A nation-wide survey found 3.2 million persons of Spanish origin living in CA, where they formed 15% of the state's population. In Texas the 2.3 million of Spanish origin comprised 19 % of the population.

Overall, 6.4 million of the nation's 11.2 million people of Spanish origin live in the southwestern states of California, Texas, Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico. Eighty-five% of the 6.4 million in the Southwest are of Mexican descent.

According to the New York Times (Jan. 1975) more U.S. students are studying Spanish than any other language, and despite the drop in enrollment in other languages, Spanish is holding its own. The Association of Departments of Foreign Languages reported in its 1973 Bulletin that 40.3% of students studying foreign languages were enrolled in Spanish.

GOING METRIC IN SPANISH

"Going Metric for Career Teachers", a set of training materials developed by the Center for Metric Education at Western Michigan University, has now been translated into Spanish. The highly illustrated instructional material has been prepared in as pure a Spanish form as is possible so that its use would not be restricted to a particular geographic region. Teachers using the material will need to make some adaptations to meet the needs of their particular students, according to the Project Director, Dr. John Feirer.

Teachers who are interested in cooperating in an evaluation of the materials and will agree to use the kit in their teaching of Spanish-speaking students should contact: Dr. John Feirer, Director

THE "ADOPT A STUDENT" PROGRAM

For the third consecutive year we have organized this Student Exchange program between the U.S. and Spain and we can say that once again it has been a success. Over 250 students from Spain came to the U.S. and lived with American families for four weeks. They have gone back to Spain with a greater understanding of this country and much love for the families who hosted them.

Over 100 American youngsters went to Spain and lived for the same period of time with Spanish families. The cost of the program: $400.00. They have returned to the States with a greater fluency in Spanish and a better understanding of Spain.

We would like to expand the program to new areas and are now looking for Spanish Teachers who might enjoy acting as Local Coordinators. If interested, please write:

TACO TIPS from Wisconsin Spanish Teacher, May 1974

A "taco", the national sandwich of Mexico, is made from a fried, folded "tortilla" stuffed with meat, cheese, lettuce and sauce. A tortilla, the most important item in Mexican cookery, is a thin, cornmeal pancake; rolled around beef or cheese and doused with chili sauce, it becomes an "enchilada". Ground meat flavored with chili sauce, then rolled in cornmeal dough and steam-cooked, is known as a "tamale". "Chalupas" and "nachos" are fried tortillas garnished with refried beans, melted cheese and lettuce or hot (Jalapeno) peppers. All of these dishes are popular in the Western and Southwestern U.S. as well as in Mexico. For example, in San Antonio Texas, restaurants sell over 100,000 tacos a day. Some of these spicy foods are available at supermarket frozen food counters.

HISTORY OF BREAD IN MEXICO

For the history of bread in Mexico, we have to start with the tortilla, "that flat, leathery, not unpleasant, thin cake which is the Mexican's bread", as well as the simple instrument for conveying to his mouth such dripping messes as beans and guacomole. The Spaniards said about the Indians whom they observed, "They eat their food on those round plates and then they eat the plates!"

The heritage goes back to the time when the nomadic see-gathers of the highland of Central American or Peru found a thick-bladed grass with edible seeds growing in a single ear. The accidental sprouting of the kernels gave some early Burbank the idea of planting them. From that moment on the civilization of the Western Hemisphere was never the same. The Incas, Mayas, Toltecs, Mixtecs, Aztecs and the other "tecs" of pre-Colombian America owed their existence to the discovery of the maize.

These first Americans cultivated the wild maize so that it would yield kernels both for seed and food. They learned that seed could be kept indefinitely if kept from moisture. They stored it in elevated stone bins. These Indians of Middle America brought the seed to the hot Mexican coast and to the semi-arid country of the Central Plateau where it flourished - and so from Central America to Iowa.

The maize began to take on certain extra-terrestrial qualities to the Indian and soon became the center of tribal religion. It was the holy grain, the teocentli of the Aztecs. Its planting and harvest gave rise to the most solemn festivals of the year. It became the staff of life and it still is.

One marvelous thing about it was that it does not require irrigation. On the other hand it is one of the most soil exhausting crops. The slash-and-burn method of preparing the plot (milpa) and erosion are the villains. The milpa must constantly be moved. This may be one explanation for the disappearance of certain Indian civilizations.

The same imagination that created the corn dieties developed various methods for cooking the corn that have come down to this day. The fresh ears were boiled or roasted, sometimes dried and husked, then roasted and ground to make a nourishing powder (pinole) which was canned for food on trips. However the Tortilla is still a staple in most Mexican families, especially when served with beans, eggs and meat. They are the basis also for many Mexican dishes such as enchiladas, tacos, and tostados.

The dry maize is prepared by soaking it overnight in a solution of lime or wood ashes, which removes the hard outer shell. Then it is ground into a wet meal (masa) with a stone rolling pin (mano) on the three-legged "thing" known as a metate. Sometimes the masa is mixed with water, flavored with fruit juice and drunk as atole or sweetened with sugar and flavored with cinnamon and chocolate - all local products. Its chief use is for making tortillas, which are formed by hand and then baked on an earthen ware griddle (comal). But today, with modern machinery, tortillas are cranked out to order, although everyone will tell you that those tortillas don't taste like those done by hand with the metate.

With the arrival of the Spanish conquistadores in Mexico came the wheat. The Spaniards taught the Indians to plant and cultivate wheat with a primitive tool called the coa, a simple digging stick which is still in use in some isolated regions. The conquistadores also taught the Indians to make Spanish rolls out of the wheat flour and to bake them in round beehive ovens. Thus the Spaniards had the best of both worlds, corn and wheat. Still in Mexico today Spaniards seem to have a monopoly on the bakeries.

Nearly all the breads of Mexico are made of the same basic dough of flour, water, yeast, salt and shortening. It is called the alma or soul of the bread. The personality of each of the rolls is created by adding varying amounts of sugar and egg to the alma. The panadero (baker) shapes each piece, puts them on trays and into huge ovens. When done, they are set in neat rows on the display shelves. Delivery boys fill their enormous reed baskets with bread and mount their bicycles racing through the mad traffic balancing the baskets on their heads.

One can still buy more than 300 kinds of bread in Mexico. The classifications of shapes range from foods, fruits, flowers and animals to man himself. In short, the story of Mexican bread is a symbolic account of the cultural, ethnic, seasonal and artistic history of the country.

ALL KINDS OF "GOOD STUFF"

Is your foreign language classroom bare and unattractive? A little too green by any chance? If someone walks into your room, could he tell it from an English or Mathematics classroom? If not, the following article may be of interest to you. Even though I am talking specifically about materials available in Spanish, the methods for using free materials would be the same in any language even though materials may be more difficult to find in this country. All it cost me was the energy that I had been wasting in frustration and a few stamps.

My basic assumption was that since Spanish-speaking people make up the second largest minority in the United States, the leading manufacturers of brand name products would be involved in promotional work in our large Spanish-speaking communities. I also assumed that various government agencies would be concerned with serving these people. In addition, I thought that the embassies would have some materials which they would send upon request.

First of all, I went to the supermarket and copied down the names and addresses of several major companies from the labels on their products. Then I made up a letter requesting any promotional materials which they would have in Spanish. Most of the companies must have seen this as a good opportunity to publicize their products, because the response was overwhelming. I was delighted to receive a personal letter from El Gigante Verde, but was crushed to find out that Juan Valdez, the Colombian coffee bean picker, does not really exist! I received some very warm responses from the sales representatives. If they did not have very much to send, they were very apologetic and would send me whatever they could find. Some companies did not respond at all. I received only two nasty letters informing me that I was bothering them with a petty request.

Now for the first time I actually have more materials to use in my classroom than I can use. I received such things as: large billboard size posters with captions in Spanish, travel posters, maps, charts, brochures, magazines, can labels, box flats, recipe booklets, television commercials on 16mm film, taped radio commercials, income tax forms and other government publications in Spanish, information about joining the army, consumer goods reports, trade journals, and Spanish language newspapers from several different countries.

I did not think it sufficient to receive these materials and just use them to cover up the cracks in the walls. I felt that they should be an integral part of the learning experience in my classroom. For example, I used all the Spanish newspapers in conjunction with materials from the printing room of the local newspaper and a corresponding unit in the textbook. This made the textbook discussion come alive for the students. Some of the materials which I received were sufficient to make a unit by themselves. For example, a food manufacturer sent me a large wall poster showing the five basic food groups in Spanish, and 100 individual copies in miniature for each of my students. In addition, they sent small recipe booklets for each student written in Spanish. Using these materials, and with the help of the home economics department, my students were actually able to prepare some typical Mexican dishes.

By using consumer goods reports and government forms in Spanish, you can make up some very interesting vocabularies which are right up-to-date. These would include such words as gas rationing, energy crisis, ecology, welfare, food stamps, and so forth. It is interesting to notice how much more anxious students are to learn words of this type than the usual textbook fare such as pencil, blackboard and book.

FILMS FOR THE SPANISH CLASSROOM

Dreams and Nightmares named "Best Political Documentary for 1974" at Leipzig Film Festival. Few events stirred the conscience of all mankind as did the Spanish Civil War. Out of this arose a unique phenomenon - the International Brigades - 40,000 men from 27 countries, who volunteered to defend the Spanish Republic against Hitler, Mussolini and Franco. Among them were 3,200 Americans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade. Thirty-five years later, one of them returns to Spain "to walk again where we had run and crawled so long ago." Abe Osheroff, Spanish Civil War veteran and writer-producer of this award-winning film returned to Spain last year with a camera to see whether the sacrifices of his colleagues had been in vain.

The movie is a montage of newsreel footage of Depression America and the Civil War itself, intercut with material shot by Mr. Osheroff in contemporary Spain. Inquiries into obtaining the film should be addressed to:

"FEELIN' GROOVY"

in French

C'est bon la vie

- Nana Mouskouri

Doucement, ne buscule pas
Laissez-moi, prolonger l'aube -
Et chanter n'importe quoi,
Vive la vie, que c'est bon la vie.

Da da da da da da da, c'est bon la vie.
Da da da da da da da, c'est bon la vie.

Allo taxi la route est longue
Et le plan pour le tour du monde -
Tu vas voir comme c'est joli.
Do on do bie, c'est bon la vie.

Da da da da da da da, c'est bon la vie.
Da da da da da da da, c'est bon la vie.

Je n'ai rien a faire et pas de rendez-vous
Je suis libre comme l'air et prete a tout.
La folie serait de ne pas perdre la folie.
Vive la vie, que c'est bon la vie.

Baa da da da ...

Doucement, ne buscule pas
Laissez-moi prolonger l'aube -

The 59th Street Bridge Song

- Paul Simon

Slow down, you're movin' too fast
You've gotta make the morning last
Just kickin' down the cobble stones
Lookin' for fun and feelin' groovy.

Ba da da....Feelin' groovy.

Hello lamppost what ya knowin'?
I've come to watch your flowers growin'
Ain't ya got no rhymes for me?
Do in do be...Feelin' groovy.
Da da da....Feelin' groovy.

I've got no deeds to do,
No promises to keep,
I'm daffied and drowsy and ready to sleep
Let the morning time drop all its pebbles
Life, I love you, all is groovy. on me

CROSS-CULTURAL EXCHANGE

Comments Overheard from French People

About the American Culture

from Peguy Nocturne
New Jersey

McDONALDS - It is really unbelievable.
You go into a restaurant, pay for your food; and they expect you to clean up the table, when you are finished. Why don't they just ask the clients to sweep the place!

The Americans serve all their drinks half filled with ice. Drinking such cold beverages is bad for the liver.

HALLOWEEN - It's legalized vandalism.
The youths go wild: smashing pumpkins, soaping windows, filling mailboxes with shaving cream.

The Americans have a greeting card for everything: new babies, new houses, April Fool's Day, St. Patrick's Day, and Easter.
They send Valentines to all their friends and even to their wives.

FLOWERS - An American student came to my home for dinner. He brought me chrysanthemums!
The poor fellow didn't know they are considered the cemetery flower in France!

MATERNITY WARDS - How inhuman! The baby is behind this glass wall which is not even near her mother's room. You can not visit when you like, and the mother only stays in 3-4 days!

TOWARD FREE CONVERSATION IN THE CLASSROOM

Presenter: Kay Flanagan, Whitewater Public Schools
Reprint from WAFLT Bulletin, Spring 1975

The presenter offered general guidelines she uses in developing free conversation with her students. First, students who are fluent need not talk in long complicated utterances or express "great ideas." Small talk is an important element in free conversation in fluency. Second, French is a "must" in the classroom. Students use French at all times to communicate with the teacher and with each other. Third, skits and stunts are fun, but they must be used correctly: students should use vocabulary and structures from a given lesson, adhering to them closely in preparing original skits or stunts. These are some specific activities that have been successful in her classes:

1. Have students give a resume of an assignment - then re-give it, imitating someone's voice and inflection (former President Nixon or General De Gaulle).
2. Keep a trunk ("la grande caisse") filled with props, costumes, etc., that can be used by students to help with their presentations.
3. Have students personalize basic ideas or reading selections from the text: "une soiree reussite" which was really a disaster. Students can think of other such situations in their own lives and make up similar skits/plays, using the same structures from the text. Another example was taken from "Souvenirs of Childhood, in which the imperfect tense was practiced and applied. Ms. Flanagan suggested selecting the best skits of the year and presenting them in the evening, inviting the public. Awards are then given for the best actor, best actress etc. Such an activity motivates and inspires the students to be creative and to do their best throughout the year.
4. Plan a "Show and Tell" day. Students bring something to class (usually dealing with their hobby or favorite activity) and talk to their peers about it. Such as "How to Box," "How to Start a Car." Such an activity is probably most effective in an advanced class.
5. Use transparencies of "Saturday Evening Post" covers, or covers of magazines, to stimulate descriptions, sub-titles, short narratives. Cartoons and caricature drawings are also useful for stimulating captions or anecdotes.
6. Make up a murder mystery. A situation is presented (in French) to the students. Small-groups of students discuss possible solutions - each group must come up with some sort of solution, no matter how silly. Later they can make up their own mystery situations to present to the class to work out in small groups.
7. Since school administrators are very concerned these days with "inquiry techniques," take a poem or song and ask guiding questions for students to answer and discuss in interpreting the work. Later students should be encouraged to develop their own questions which they can share with the group.
8. Use the "interview" technique. For example, one student is Marie Antoinette and another is Robespierre. Students in the class ask a series of questions of one of the two characters (who may have to read up on the person he or she is portraying). Students may write up a newspaper "report" of their interview as a writing activity and then present it orally to the class.
9. Do a take-off of the "Dating Game" or "Price is Right." Students practice making up questions and again use the inquiry technique.

In all of these activities, Ms. Flanagan pointed out that visuals (provided by the students or the teacher) are very important for meaning and motivation. She also suggested using a variety of reading materials and taping/video-taping as many of the activities as possible to share with other classes, with the administration and with parents.

POSSIBLE MINI-COURSE OFFERINGS A Foreign Language Department might select to make the study of languages as interesting and worthwhile as possible for the students. Courses would be of varying length: 2 - 9 weeks.

FRENCH MINI-COURSES
Semester I

Conversation and Grammar Review six weeks
A short review of tenses, idioms, and important constructions with emphasis on using them orally.

Sports three weeks
The most popular ones in France will be studied by means of film strips, films, tapes and reading.

Skits one week
Short humorous plays will be selected from correlated tapes and books

Reading for Fun three weeks
Each student will select his reading program from a wide variety of material. Tapes, correlated books, records, etc.

History three weeks
An introduction to the most interesting events in French history, through articles, reading, filmstrips and correlated tapes.

Skits one week
A continuation of the previous "skit" course. Acting out of student prepared skits, or specially chosen plays.

Semester II

Chateaux three weeks
Visits by films, film strips, and reading to the most famous chateaux.

Independent projects three weeks
Students will select their own topics to work on.

Foods and Cooking three weeks
Students will learn about French foods, how to order in a French restaurant, and do actual French cooking.

Advanced Conversation and Composition three weeks
More practice in learning to converse and write well in French.

Culture three weeks
Finding out about how the French people live and how their customs differ from ours.

Trip Planning three weeks
Planning a trip to the various regions of France, learning useful tourist vocabulary, and regulations.

Some courses will be conducted by individualized instruction, some in small groups, some with the whole class. Each student will work at his own level of achievement.

FRENCH WORST AT MONGRELIZING LANGUAGE by John Vinocur (Paris AP)

Precise as a slide rule, more mellifluous than temple bells and as vague as an October haze when necessary, the French language still hasn't resolved its problems with AGRR, ARSH and AAMIGN.

Starting next year, the government promises to war on linguistic mongrelization by fining those responsible for the infiltration of foreign terms.

But before hauling a street vendor into court for calling a saucisse de francfort a hot dog, says Jacques Gandouin, a professor at the University of Paris, the government would do well to purge French of a problem no one can blame on the Americans or the British - the passion for abbreviations and acronyms that few people here, and virtually no one abroad, understand.

AGRR sounds like someone getting strangled, but a directory of 20,000 French abbreviations says it's the General Association of Cooperative Pensions. ARSH is really no more offensive than the Association for Research in Human Sciences. And AAMIGN, seemingly the product of a throat disease, turns out to be the Association of Supervisors of the National Geographic Institute.

Translators say the French probably use twice as many of these acronyms and similar abbreviations as speakers and writers of English or German. "These abbreviations are perhaps a greater danger of comprehension than the foreign words, which after all can be naturalized in a satisfactory way", Gandouin said. "They're ugly and they are among the things that stand in the way of universality for the French language."

A tourist can't avoid them. Many cafe awnings are marked p.m.u. and a.f.p. The first means that the cafe has an offtrack betting window, the second that it receives a wire report of race results. Prices on the menu, alongside lobster, for example, might be marked s.g., which means "according to size," and the bill might come with t.t.s.c. next to the total - all tax and service included.

FRENCH DRAMA

Le Treteau de Paris appeared on stage for two presentations of L'Avare of Moliere. Teachers interested in obtaining student copies of the play will find an attractive one for sale by French and European Publications, Inc., 115 Fifth Ave., New York N.Y. 10003. The books are $1.50 per copy. For all orders add $1.00 for postage, handling and insurance. Minimum order, five copies. Allow up to two weeks for delivery. All orders prepaid.

MATERIALS ON FRENCH ROLE IN BICENTENNIAL

Few French teachers, if any, will be failing to stress the French contribution to the young American nation during the upcoming bicentennial celebration. For those who wish some background information on the subject, Professor Maurice Ross has prepared a packet which he offers to interested parties. The packet includes "Teaching the Reasons for France's Participation in the American Revolution," "Le Barbier de Seville et la Guerre d'Independence," and "The Ordeal of a Merciful Man", which explains how the French court rescued Washington from a painful dilemma. Professor Ross has also produced a series of short radio broadcasts about the accomplishment of independence. To receive a copy of the packet, send a self-addressed manila envelope with 26¢ in postage to Professor Maurice Ross, Dept. of Foreign Languages and Literatures, Purdue University, West Lafayette, Indiana 47907.

FRENCH PHONICS FOR AMERICANS is a booklet which makes it possible for the high school or college student to learn to pronounce 85% of all the words in the French dictionary correctly, and without prompting or hesitation, is now available. Within a period of from fifteen to thirty classroom hours, the student can, through this self-teaching format, learn to see written French as does a native speaker. An abstract and a copy are available through ERIC. Orders for multiple copies: Dept. of Modern Languages, Georgia Inst. of Technology, Atlanta GA 30332. Xeroxed text available at $1.75 ea.

LA CONCIERGE (from THE IMPULSE 9/75)

Did you hear what the concierge said about the croissants? She says they're not French at all. She says they originated in 1686 when the Turks of the Ottoman Empire were besieging Budapest. Hungarian bakers, who worked at night, heard the invaders digging tunnels to reach the heart of the city. An alarm was raised and the assault repulsed. As their reward, the bakers were granted the privilege of creating a commemorative pastry taking the form of a crescent, emblem of the defeated Turks. But according to another tradition, croissants were first produced by the bakers of Vienna, to express their rejoicing in the western victory over the Turks in 1683. But the cult of the moon, with the crescent used as a religious symbol, is far older than any Turk or Christian. True, since then, the French have given these rolls a special culinary "chic" - and their name. Well, the concierge, you know how she talks . . .

A TASTE OF PARIS by Theodora Fitzgibbon
(Houghton Mifflin Co. Boston 1974, $7.95)

French cookbooks are plentiful and always in season. This one, however, is out of the ordinary. The author has concocted a fascinating melange of recipes, served up with a liberal sprinkling of anecdotes about the restaurants of Paris and the famous and infamous persons who frequent them. The book is accented with wonderful photographs of la belle époque and unexpected tidbits of information. Whether you're a gourmet, gourmand, French teacher, Francophile, photographer or nostalgia buff, this cookbook is for you.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

French is a hobby with me. I speak it understandably, but grasp it rather poorly when it is spoken by the average French person. At a formal dinner where I was surrounded by French people, I was indulging liberally in my conversational French, but having trouble when I had to listen. I overheard a French woman sitting two seats down the table say: "That American speaks French very well. Isn't it too bad he's deaf." contrib. by John Kimberly

FRENCH BREAD RECIPE

Ingredients:

- 2 cups warm water (105 to 110 degrees)
- 1 package active dry yeast or 1 cake compressed yeast
- 1 tablespoon salt
- 6 to 6½ cups unbleached flour
- a sprinkling of cornmeal

1. Measure water into large bowl. Crumble or sprinkle in yeast. Stir to dissolve. Beat in salt and 4 cups flour to make stiff dough, mixing with hands if necessary.
2. Turn dough out onto floured board. Knead about 5 min., sprinkling with flour if dough is still sticky.
3. Place dough in large, lightly greased bowl with fairly vertical sides to aid the rising. Cover with damp towel. Set in warm place (75 to 80 degrees - top of stove or refrigerator is good)
4. Let dough rise about 2½ hours until triple in bulk.
5. Punch down with fist. Let rise 30 -45 min. or until more than double. Turn out onto floured board. Cut into 3 or 4 equal parts. Roll each back and forth with palms, sliding hands gradually toward ends as dough lengthens. Roll it 15" long or as long as your cookie sheet
6. Sprinkle cookie sheet with cornmeal. Place bread on cookie sheet. Take a razor blade and make 3 or 4 long diagonal slashes ¼ to ½ inch deep. Let dough rise, uncovered, in warm place about 2 hours or until doubled in bulk. While dough rises, heat over to 400 degrees. Put a shallow pan of boiling water on bottom shelf: will create steam. Brush loaves with cold water. Bake 20 minutes. Brush again and bake 20 minutes. Transfer loaves to wire rack to cool.

LANGUAGE CAN BE EXPENSIVE!

To solve the language problem, according to word from San Francisco, Place Pigalle encourages customers to order wine by number . . . Other evening a businessman ordered a bottle of No. 103 but the waiter thought he said 104. The guest liked it so much, he ordered a second bottle. Instead of his $6.50 wine, he was drinking a $38 a bottle! He & owner split bill.

FILMS FOR THE FRENCH TEACHER

French Film Descriptions: Need help on deciding which films might be most worthwhile to show in class? Sandra J. Savignon has prepared an evaluative guide to over 100 education films relating to French language and culture. These films were systematically reviewed and rated by teachers in training under the supervision of Professor Savignon. The listing for each film includes a description of the contents, an indication of the age and linguistic level for which it is judged most suitable, and a summary of viewers' assessments of its overall value. This publication is available FREE to classroom teachers through the cooperation and support of the Department of French and the Visual Aids Service of the University of Illinois (Urbana-Champaign). Requests for the material, accompanied by two first-class postage stamps to cover mailing, should be sent to Professor Sandra J. Savignon, Dept. of French, 2090 Foreign Languages Building, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.

Filmstrip & Tape on French-Speaking Switzerland: Joan Jukich and Yoland Jenny of the Department of Foreign Languages at the University of Minnesota-Duluth have authored a filmstrip/tape/script under a grant from the University of Minnesota which presents a comprehensive view of French-speaking Switzerland. The program fills a real need, reports Professor Jenny, because of the unavailability of any materials on the Suisse Romande or Belgium. It depicts scenes of everyday life as well as sites of historical and literary interest. There are two soundtracks, one in English for cultural or social studies classes, and one in French for intermediate and advanced students. Write to:

Contemporary French Civilization, a new interdisciplinary journal devoted to the study of French speaking cultures throughout the world, is designed to address the needs of faculty (secondary and advanced levels) in French, history, political science, sociology and other related disciplines. In the forefront are the 25-30,000 French-language teachers in the U.S. alone who share the serious and often difficult task of acting as the chief interpreters of French speaking cultures for thousands of students.

Articles, annotated bibliographies, interviews, notes and reviews are solicited from persons wishing to share their knowledge and insights with a broad, diversified audience.

Initially, the journal will be published bi-annually with the first issue appearing in the fall of 1976.

PRIMARY FRENCH IN THE BALANCE

Clare Burstall, Monika Jamieson, Susan Cohen and Margaret Hargreaves, A report of the National Foundation for Educational Research in England and Wales (published in England in 1974 and in the United States through Humanities Press in 1975), $11.75

PRIMARY FRENCH IN THE BALANCE reports on a ten year national experiment in foreign language teaching in England and Wales which was set up to examine the feasibility and advisability of expanding the teaching of French to all students at the primary (elementary school) level. Specifically, data were to be collected relating to the experimental pupils' level of achievement in French (with comparison made to student beginning the language at a later age) and to the development of their attitudes toward learning the language. Sub-questions included such items as examining the effect of pupil variables (e.g., sex, socio-economic status, etc.) and teachers' attitudes/expectations on the level of achievement of the students and on their attitudes toward foreign language learning. A wealth of statistical data was collected, the figures of which are contained in separate technical appendices. This volume summarizes and discusses the findings of the experiment in a coherent well-organized, and thorough fashion.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . ?

(Some interesting and curious facts on German contributions to American history)

...the name "America" was first used for the new continent by German cartographer Martin Waldseemüller who in his "Cosmographiae Introductio" of 1507 mistakenly attributed the discovery of the new world to Italian navigator Amerigo Vespucci?

...Peter Minuet who bought Manhattan from the Indians in 1626 and erected the fort known today as the "Battery" was born in Wesel, Germany?

...German immigrants brought to the U.S. not only beer and sauerkraut, but also Christmas trees, Easter eggs, blue jeans, and the "comic strip"?

...Civil War cartoonist Thomas Nast, who created the Republican elephant, the Democratic donkey and Santa Claus, was born in Landau, Germany?

...the famous painting of "Washington Crossing the Delaware" was painted by Emanuel Leutze while he was actually living in a town on the Rhine?

...that the first newspaper to print the Declaration of Independence was Heinrich Miller's "Pennsylvanischer Staatsbote" in its issue of Tuesday, July 9, 1776?

...that 35 million American citizens today one out of every six - can trace their ancestry to Germany?

EINEM GESCHENKEN GAUL

Are you having difficulty keeping the bulletin board displays in your classroom attractive and current? Are your facts and figures on West Germany those of the Erhardt administration? Does your dearth of recent information on Austria and Switzerland cause these German speaking countries to suffer neglect? Where do you turn when some of your students begin to grow disenchanted with outdated factual and descriptive materials? Turn to the custodian! A kind word or two and he will most likely aid you in properly disposing of the cardboard box of odds and ends which has outlived its usefulness! Next, with the expenditure of a dollar or so for postage stamps and an hour or so of your time, this situation can be vastly improved. A wide variety of sources advertise regularly and consider it part of their service equipping the German teacher with materials which considerably enhance the foreign language classroom experience. The returns will usually outweigh time spent in formulating requests.

★ The Literary Society Foundation, Inc. (Box 155, Gracie Station, N.Y., N.Y. 10028) continues to grant funds for purchasing books, equipment and teaching materials. It also provides medals and certificates to students who demonstrate outstanding achievement in German.

★ The German Information Center (410 Park Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10022) offers a free subscription to The German Tribune, a newspaper printed in English which republishes articles of interest from the German Press. The Center has also recently received a variety of factual pamphlets from its publishers abroad.

★ Colorful bulletin boards can be constructed by means of the attractive brochures which The Swiss Center (608 Fifth Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10020) and the Austrian National Tourist Office (200 E. Randolph Dr., Suite 5130, Chicago, Ill. 60601) mail upon request. The countries' skiing areas are heavily emphasized, although factual booklets are available too.

★ Besides possessing a substantial film-lending library from which films can be borrowed free of charge, The German Consulate General (Dr. Wolfgang Schumann, 104 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60603) will donate book prizes to outstanding German students. When requesting the books, one should not forget to ask for Tatsachen über Deutschland, a 450-page factual compendium of up-to-date information of West Germany.

★ The regional office of Lufthansa German Airlines (814 Roanoke Bldg., 109 South Seventh St., Minneapolis, Minn. 55402) can be contacted if brochures concerning travel to and in Germany are desired. These brochures are especially useful since they include regional maps of the country.

★ Perhaps the most generous of the German benefactors is Inter Nationes (Referat Information, 53 Bonn-Bad Godesberg 1, Kennedyallee 91-103, Federal Republic of Germany). The variety of items this foundation offers is so great that one must carefully specify needs and desires, whether they be maps, posters, card games, travel guides, factual pamphlets, literary texts, or biographies of famous Germans.

★ Since a complete listing of travel bureaus and information centers in the principal German cities is too lengthy to be printed here, interested persons may write to David C. Nelson, Box 8198 University Station, Grand Forks, N.D. 58202, for copies

★ For loan is a film Europa Heute for promotional purposes. German teachers may write for information to the AAIG Services Center, 339 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19106.

★ Inter Nationes of Germany offers free music tapes, printed stories and songs to teachers of German. Ask for Musik and Wort catalogues. Inter Nationes, D-53 Bonn-Bad Godesberg 1, Kennedyallee 9-103, Bundesrepublik Deutschland.

DEUTSCHES BROT

Baking has been linked with the economic and spiritual lives of Germany and has played an almost mystical role throughout German history. Bread was honored in pagan times as the staff of life and also as a sacred symbol; in Christian times it has been thought of as more than a food because of its connection with the bread of Eucharist. Its use and abuses have been a constant theme of German prose and poetry. One of Grimm's fairy tales tells of a mother whose beloved child died. Wishing to buy the child the noblest pair of shoes, she baked a pair with the whitest flour. But in the other world, as in this one, it was a sin to tread upon bread (the Arabs still believe this) and the dead child could not find his peace until his mother took off the shoes of bread.

Bread has always been the basic food of the German people. The lack of it during the First and Second World Wars still haunts even the most affluent German of today.

In Germany, as in other countries, white bread has always been a status symbol; generally the poor ate dark rye. In the past, rural bakers were often prevented by guild restrictions from baking white bread. The fact that Central and Southern Europe have always suffered from fuel shortages has made centralized bread-baking preferable to home baking.

In 1466, a portrait of a Nürnberg baker shows both big, round, dark loaves and small, oblong, white ones, as well as what we now call finger rolls and pretzels. Such daily breads were a far cry from the fancy bakings of Medieval and Modern Germany. The baker was a sculptor molding his dough into complex forms, almost always with ancient symbolic meanings. These are the famous "Gebildebrote" or picture breads, taking the shapes of animals, flowers, wheat and stars.

German bread (Brot) is almost literally the staff of life for the German. It is baked from a variety of flours, from the finely-ground, bleached flour producing the white (Weissbrot, Kastenbrot) to the coarse, whole meal, black bread (Vollkornbrot, Kommisbrot) of the army ration. Varying shades of light and dark brown, and even gray (graubrot) are produced by using unbleached, coarsely-ground flour and adding molasses. The light or dark brown (Westphalian Pumpernickel) rye breads with their dense texture and sweetish taste are nutritious favorites.

The German housewife (Hausfrau) buys bread in five standard shapes: the broad, half-round Brot (Brotlaib); the longbread (Langbrot), a mixture of rye and wheat flour and the round bread (Rundbrot, ein Schwarzbrot), white and similar to the American loaf; the long rectangular Kastenbrot, the crisp Knöckebrot, and the dark thinly-sliced Pumpernickel.

The Germans eat toast and sandwiches too, but their "toast" is invariably sautéed to a crisp brown and is the base for delicious toppings of a relatively simple nature, such as creamed mushrooms with tongue, Roquefort cheese with apples or the unique gourmet delight, the Toast Miami, of the King's Cafe in Baden-Baden; a pan broiled slice of beef filet, pineapple chunks, apple slices, a few sections of mandarines or tangerines, cream sauce and the cranberry-like "Preiselbeeren".

Far more prevalent - and prosaic - are the sandwiches, (belegtes Butterbrot) open-faced, and often two slices of bread, white or dark, each with a contrasting topping; these might be a pairing of ham with sliced hard eggs or chicken salad and asparagus tips with mayonnaise. Most common are the simple bread slices, ranging from French style white to the rye and pumpernickel breads topped with many possible cheese and meat paste spreads and sausages which are so much a part of German cuisine. In some rural areas the typical open-faced style found is the "bread sandwich"; one slice of pumpernickel is buttered or spread with fresh lard or bacon drippings and salt, and then sandwiched between two slices of sour rye.

During the holidays rich breads laced with citrons, nuts and covered with icings are rich additions to the festive cuisine (Küche). The Bishop's Bread (Bischofsbrod), the Three King's Bread (Dreikönigsbrod) and the Christmas Fruit Bread (Hützlbrod) are typical.

The baker's dough (Teig) however, is, in a practical and often artistic way, used to produce several varieties of rolls, most of them made from the white or light doughs. They are the heart of the continental breakfast with its marmalade and coffee pot.

The word bread (Brot) has become part of the language itself in its incorporation into idioms and sayings of the country as well as being used to designate two of the five "meals" in the German day. The Brotzeit; second breakfast (Zweites Frühstück), eaten by all at about 10:30, includes belegtes Brötchen and the light repast, (Abendbrot) in the early evening, includes a platter of breads, cheeses and sausages of various kinds (kalter Aufschnitt).

WHY RUSSIAN?

Russian is the second most important language of science. "English is the leader, with Russian firmly in second place. This order applies to. . . chemistry, physics, geology, mathematics, and biological sciences." So concludes I.L. Kosin in an article published in Bioscience entitled "The Growing Importance of Russian as a Language of Science."

According to Kosin, out of 26,000 articles, reports and books in physical sciences abstracted in Jan. 1972 by Chemical Abstracts, more than 5,200 articles were written in Russian as compared with approximately 1,500 articles in the next ranked foreign languages.

While many Russian scientists are able to read the published reports of our scientists and make full and effective use of our scientific findings, most American scientists are not capable of reading the Russian publications. For this reason, American scientists are often ignorant of scientific progress in the Soviet Union and waste time and money duplicating work already performed there.

Many American scientists rely on abstracts in English translation, but the number of Soviet journals in translations is "woefully" small compared to the total published, says Kosin, and the cost of translated material is high.

Kosin believes the science-oriented student will become more selective in deciding on the first foreign language he studies. "For many, if not most of them," he says, "common sense will point to Russian."

(This statement and its accompanying illustration were taken from a prospectus published by the Purdue Univ. Dept. of Foreign Languages & Literatures for Russian students.)

STARTING YOUNG The Soviet Union believes in teaching foreign languages to students at an early age. In Moscow, for example, there are at least 80 special schools which provide 10 years of intensive foreign language instruction in addition to their regular curriculum. For example special school #60, located in Kalinin Prospekt area of Moscow, one of the most modern, the school is known as the "Angliski Shkola" (the English school), where foreign language instruction begins at age 7 and continues through age 17. Most of the faculty is bilingual, most of the signs are in Russian and English is taught in a British accent. (Parade)

JOB OPENINGS FOR RUSSIAN OR ARABIC

Americans fluent in Russian and Arabic are being hired as translators in ever-increasing numbers. The new job opportunities have arisen because of America's expanded relations with the Soviet Union and Arabic countries in recent years.

"Three years ago we had only three full-time translators working in Russian. Now we have 22 or 23, and 18 others part-time," said the spokesman for New York's All-Language Service, Inc., one of America's largest translation bureaus. The firm, which had only one Arabic translator a few years ago, now has 11.

LANGUAGE GAP

Recently returned from an official visit to the Soviet Union, Dr. John Ellis, Superintendent of the Columbus Public Schools, in an article for the Columbus DISPATCH, had this to say about America's "language gap":

"Americans are not noted for learning foreign languages. This is not the fault of the schools necessarily, although schools must share some of the blame. The Russian schools do a much better job in this area. If we are to function effectively in the world, I believe large numbers of Americans must learn to speak foreign languages fluently. The gain in knowledge will be tremendous, and we will rid ourselves of a deficiency that forms the basis for ridicule around the world."

RUSSIAN - SPANISH

At Poughkeepsie's Social Security Office, June Gillespie, a claims representative, is often called upon to interpret for Spanish or French speaking clients.

One of the most challenging tests of her linguistic ability came the day there arrived at her office an elderly woman who apparently spoke only Russian. Since no one in the office knew Russian, Mrs. Gillespie tried Spanish, in as much as the woman had a form in her hand which showed she had once lived in Argentina.

"Indeed she did speak Spanish", Mrs. Gillespie reports. "However, I am not able to understand Spanish spoken with a Russian accent, so we tried French. Her French had been learned in Europe and was spoken with a clear accent. We understood each other beautifully".

ME? LEARN LATIN?

This set of materials represents a slightly different approach to the promotion of a single language. The creators of these materials were aiming at a set of materials which would provide a learning experience in and of themselves - in addition to "selling" the language. ME? LEARN LATIN? was designed for students, guidance counselors, administrators and Latin teachers. The set of materials was prepared by Lorraine A. Strasheim, the Coordinator for School Foreign Languages, Indiana University, with the cooperation of the Indiana University Department of Classical Studies and the Latin Resource Committee of the Indiana Classical Conference, Incorporated, in 1974.

(From ACCENT on ACTFL; February 1975)

Affirmative Answers to These Questions Indicate Excellent Latin Programs

1. Does the Latin teacher work in close collaboration with departments of English, History, and Modern Languages in order to enrich learning experiences?
2. Is some emphasis placed upon history, literature, philosophy, art, and archaeology as well as upon grammar and syntax?
3. Are text materials oriented away from the narrowly grammatical and factual approach to the study of Latin so that students are aware of the affect of Latin culture upon Western Civilization?
4. Does the teacher create among his students an awareness of contemporary political, ethical, and esthetic issues?
5. Is an appreciation of the structure and beauty of the Latin language itself instilled in the mind of the student?
6. Does the teacher impress upon students that Latin should not be studied merely to serve as an aid in the understanding and manipulation of the English language?
7. Does the student understand the structure of the language at his level of achievement?
8. Is each student given an opportunity for meaningful daily recitation?
9. Are some audio-lingual-visual materials used to supplement text materials?
10. Has each pupil attained some skill in direct comprehension of written material as well as in translation of Latin into English?
11. Is a minimum of written work required throughout the study of Latin?
12. Have students in advanced classes read classical masterpieces with understanding and appreciation?
13. Do students in advanced classes, in addition to Latin readings, also read the classics in translation in order to cover a greater scope of material related to civilization?
14. Can students in advanced classes read Latin prose or poetry with a fair degree of direct comprehension.

WHO SAID LATIN WAS A DEAD LANGUAGE? Faced with predictions that high school Latin will be "extinct in all but the best schools by 1980", Vincent J. Cleary, professor of classics at the University of Massachusetts, and several colleagues have brought out a "swinging" new intermediate textbook in Latin. What's different about it? It shows Romans as people who faced the same problems as those of today. Dr. Cleary, with the help of high school teachers, made selections from Roman literature which include the following: a dramatic comedy of the Roman military by Plautus; profiles of Nero; short poems about love, death, and "What it was like to be young and very much alive 2,000 years ago". For information, please write: Department of Classical Languages, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01002.

LATIN AS A MODERN LANGUAGE

Before the rise of "modern" languages forced it into a decline, Latin was the language of commerce, the academic world, and the Church which crossed all national and intellectual frontiers. It has never really been replaced, and if a German Benedictine monk from Munich has his way, it will once again become an important medium of international communication.

According to Newsweek (August 18, 1975), Brother Caelestis Eichenseer began in the summer of 1973 a series of eleven two-week, total-immersion seminars in Latin. He prepared an illustrated lexicon of 1,200 modern Latinisms so that his students could talk about current topics and the material world of the twentieth century. Students arrived by dieseliana machina vectoria or aeroplanum pyraulocinetecum (diesel train or jet plane), wrote with a graphium spheratum (ballpoint pen), and asked such contemporary questions as "Quota hora volatus navis spatialis incohabitur? (When does the next space flight leave?)

Students ranged from housewives to international business executives. For two weeks they spoke only Latin, touring the sights of Munich, dining in that city's famous restaurants, often baffling the natives who probably thought they had seen and heard everything to do with tourists.

At least one German university - Saarbrucken - began courses in modern Latin in the fall of 1975, and three German states have accredited them. Brother Eichenseer hopes that universities in other countries will follow his lead.

The New York Times perfunctorily reported on July 29, 1975 that Congress passed a seven-year extension to the Voting Rights Act and sent the bill to President Ford to be signed into law. The bill continues to guarantee black voting rights while broadening its protection to Spanish-speaking Americans and other "language minorities specifically Asians, Indians and Alaskan natives.

Before all the laudation begins, however, let me ask boldly, "What about the rest of the foreign speaking?" How is it that an important piece of civil rights legislation effectively shuts out a vast portion of the foreign-speaking in America?

Italians, Greeks, Poles, Slavs, Albanians and others, who are now lumped together in what is called the "ethnic movement", have not fared well in legislation or government programs designed to bring relief to maligned and discriminated against peoples. It is a sad commentary that groups of peoples in our society become unfashionable and are excluded from attempts at important social advances.

ITALY

The recent publication of Italian ITALIAN AMERICANA marks a turning point in Italian-American history. A cultural and historical review, it is the first academic journal devoted to Italian American participation in American civilization. Its contents are both historical and contemporary, including commentary in the humanities, research in the social sciences, short stories, poetry and reviews. The first issue is a blend of creative and critical literature, reflecting the journal's comprehensive nature.

The unprecedented Italian migrations to America and the subsequent experience of millions of Italian Americans have, in ITALIAN AMERICANA, a documentary and expressive medium. Moreover, the journal illuminates an important chapter in American history long neglected. The journal's high quality will disabuse those with condescending attitudes toward ethnic studies and stimulate further study of a neglected dimension of American history. ITALIAN CULTURE TEXTBOOKS

Two very good and fairly recent textbooks on Italian culture in Italian are presently available:

Servio Pacifici, Italia, Vita e Cultura; Random House, 1970
Aldo S. Bernardo-Rigo Mignani, Ritratto dell'Italia; D.C. Heath & Co., 1966

The only commendable book in English is slightly outdated, but could still be used profitably: Michele Cantarella, The Italian Heritage; Henry Holt and Co., 1959

MALT Bulletin, Spring 1975

Punti di Partenza by Fredrick J. Bosco and Eligia Dalbuono-Glassman
Forest House Publication, Washington D.C.

This is an excellent up-to-date supplementary text for second and third year Italian classes. Its seven themes deal with subjects students can relate to easily; films, means of communicating, a street accident, health and diet, dreams and job hunting.

Passages reflect varied styles of expression including journalistic writing, essays, dialogue, poetry, ads, an interview guide and correspondence. The approach encourages lively discussions and debate. It also contains valuable exercises that the student will find fun to do, such as; describe the way they see themselves. I would highly recommend it to supplement and add interest to classroom activities or even as a basic text for third year students.

BOOKLET ON CHINESE EDUCATION AVAILABLE

A fascinating booklet on The Educational Revolution in China is available for 70¢ (make check payable to Superintendent of Documents) from the U.S. Government Printing Office. Send order to Public Documents Distribution Center, Pueblo, Colorado 81009. The 52 page booklet traces the educational revolution begun at Mao Tse-Tung's behest in 1966, and summarizes the basic and distinctive features of the new system evolving in China. Principal features of the new system are: A purposeful effort on a national scale to grant preferential treatment to all "workers and peasants" who are deemed to have been educationally disadvantaged in the past. Emphasis is on practical training and vocational experience as a major part of the formal curriculum.

NEW VOCABULARY GIMMICK - One of the newest education products in Japan is a toilet tissue called "Please English", marketed by the Yokohama paper firm. When the company found itself overstocked, they decided to capitalize on the study-consciousness of Japanese consumers. Each unit of a roll consists of six seamed sheets on which is printed an English word and its Japanese equivalent. "This enables the user to read over and over again the six English words until the roll is gone. "Please English" was originated by Takezo Suzuki, 49, president of the firm, who says he hit upon the idea when he overheard mothers at a PTA meeting discussing how to help their children develop English vocabularies. According to Suzuki, "We are selling more than 7,000 cases a month!"

LANGUAGE CHAOS - Tens of thousands of Vietnamese youngsters, clutching dictionaries they are barely able to read and nodding assent to questions they do not understand, have entered public schools across the United States. Bilingual teaching materials are scarce and few adults with Vietnamese language skills have been hired to help. The English-as-a-second-language approach, which does not require the instructor to know the students' native tongue, is being most widely used around the country to teach English to the Vietnamese, as well as to other immigrants. The Vietnamese have arrived in the United States at a time when bilingual education is in vogue. The number of bilingual Vietnamese-English classes will probably increase once Federal money reaches the school systems.

Two unique travel-study programs will highlight San Jose State University's summer 1976 offerings:

PERU: Three Geographies, Five Worlds - June 23 to July 22

COLOMBIA: Ecology and Culture - August 1 to 30

Both the Peru and Colombia travel studies consist of in-depth studies of all geographical cultural areas of these countries, including coast, Andean highlands, and Amazon Basin. The Inca centers of Cuzco and Machu Picchu in Peru are paralleled by the Chibcha centers in the area surrounding Bogota in Colombia. The Amazon of Leticia, Colombia and Iquitos, Peru offer bases for the study of the plant and animal life, and the still-primitive jungle tribes flourishing in the world's greatest jungle.

Seashore ecological studies on the Colombian Caribbean contrast with those of Peru's famed Humboldt Current. Experimental farming in all areas, especially in the Callejon de Huaylas of Peru and the eastern Ilanos of Colombia, suggest attempts at the solution of the world's food problem in these third world nations.

Five semester units, graduate or undergraduate, from San Jose State University; $1200 fee includes cost of units as well as all other living and travel expense within the respective country. RT international transportation is additional.
